The fall semester of 2010 brought more than 5,500 people to the Mars Hill College campus to explore the exhibition, “New Harmonies: Celebrating American Roots Music” from the Smithsonian Institution’s Museum on Main Street program in partnership with the North Carolina Humanities Council. Complementing “New Harmonies” were two locally produced exhibitions, “The Roots Music of Madison County,” developed by Leslie Burrell Smith and Dave Smith, and “SodomSong,” a collection of photographs by Rob Amberg. Visitors to “New Harmonies” made their own contributions to the exhibition by creating CD covers that show the types of roots music they love and the themes their music would celebrate. By the time “New Harmonies” left Mars Hill College, these CD covers filled several walls of Weizenblatt Gallery in Moore Auditorium.

To accompany the “New Harmonies” and the Madison County music exhibitions, the Ramsey Center hosted eight programs, opening with “Our Harmonies: A Community Celebration of American Roots Music” (pictured above) and ending with the Grand Masters Fiddler Tribute. These events and others captivated and inspired the audiences, as did the performances local musicians gave for area school children. In all, nearly 1,500 public school students—including all of Madison County’s fourth, sixth, seventh, and eighth grade and Early College High School classes—experienced “New Harmonies.” Students also visited from the Yancey, Buncombe, and Mitchell County and the Asheville City districts. The Ramsey Center staff is grateful for the tremendous support of the North Carolina Humanities Council, our partners, sponsors, docents, friends, and the entire Mars Hill College community.
New Harmonies throughout the Fall

September 13, 2010
Seventy people wrestled with the definition of “true and authentic” folk music during a North Carolina Humanities Council Road Scholar lecture by Dr. Benjamin Filene, Director of Public History at UNC-Greensboro. Dr. Filene returned to campus for the North Carolina Humanities Council’s Teachers Institute in mid-October.

Bo Taylor from the Cherokee Nation and six other musical groups and solo performers representing the spectrum of American roots music wowed a crowd of five hundred at “Our Harmonies: A Community Celebration of American Roots Music,” the formal opening celebration of “New Harmonies.”

A special thanks to Roger Howell for his ongoing support and to Joe Penland for organizing and facilitating the annual Ballad and Story Swap (bottom right). Thanks also to Eve Kindley and the 4-H of Madison County for their participation. Another big thank you to all our festival volunteers, especially the Mars Hill College History and English Honors Societies.

Rob Amberg displayed several previously unpublished photographs documenting the rich ballad and music traditions of Madison County’s Laurel community in his “SodomSong” exhibition. Nearly fifty people attended Amberg’s gallery talk on “SodomSong” at Mars Hill College. Zuma Coffee in Marshall exhibited additional “SodomSong” photographs during the month of October.

Betty Smith engaged a crowd of eighty-five at her North Carolina Humanities Council Road Scholar lecture on Jane Hicks Gentry, a Hot Springs woman celebrated for her ballads, stories, and riddles. Mrs. Gentry contributed more ballads than anyone else to English folklorist Cecil Sharp when he visited the region.

A special thanks to Joshua Doby, Class of 2012, for serving as our New Harmonies photographer. Unless noted, all photograph credits belong to him.
Third Annual “Unveiling Our Treasures” Event Highlights Bascom Lamar Lunsford Collection and Faculty/Student Research

On February 15, 2011, over seventy-five people gathered from the college and the wider community to hear about the research of the first named Hart-Melvin Archival Research Fellows, Dr. Carol Boggess, Professor of English, and Kristina Blackford, Mars Hill College English major. Boggess and Blackford spent the fall of 2010 exploring the Bascom Lamar Lunsford Collection in the college’s Southern Appalachian Archives and preparing teaching resources for the English 112 “Documented Essay” course that use some of the more than 2,300 handwritten folksongs and ballads Mr. Lunsford collected. The gathering also served as a time to recognize Dr. Virginia Hart and to honor the memory of Dr. Bob Melvin, the Mars Hill College faculty members for whom the Class of 1960 named this fellowship. Dr. Melvin passed away in November 2010, and Dr. Page Lee, his longtime colleague and friend, spoke about Dr. Melvin at the “Unveiling Our Treasures” program. Mr. Ed Herron, grandson of Bascom Lamar Lunsford, delivered greetings from the Lunsford family and spoke to the importance of preserving his grandfather’s legacy. Ballad singer Dr. Betty Smith brought the ballads to life through her performance and stories.

Carol Boggess and Kristina Blackford embraced the opportunity to work with the Lunsford Collection, and they passed their enthusiasm along to the English 112 classes who experimented with the teaching materials they designed. Blackford commented about her experience, “Before this, ballads were not much more than words to a tune to me, but now they are all like my children. I’ve particularly enjoyed researching the ballads and their history—it is so interesting to see how they’ve changed throughout history and through their many singers. I am excited to help other students realize this by getting them acquainted with Lunsford and his ballads in the classroom. I am proud to say that through this project, I helped create something that may enlighten or inspire other students and interest them in regional studies—or at the very least introduce them to Lunsford and everything he has done for the mountains of North Carolina.” English 112 students responded well to the ballad activity that gives students experience with using primary sources, even as they explore continuity and change in this tradition. Other sections of English 112 will include this activity in the future.

The Ramsey Center would like to thank the Class of 1960 for this important gift that goes toward the National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge Grant and benefits Mars Hill College students and faculty. We are grateful to Dr. Virginia Hart and Dr. Bob Melvin for allowing the Archival Research Fellowship to bear their names. Finally, we would like to thank Dr. Melvin’s family for designating the Hart-Melvin Fellowship for the gifts that many friends and family members have made in his honor.

The Ramsey Center for Regional Studies collaborated with the Mars Hill College History Department to offer a special course on Public History in association with “New Harmonies: Celebrating American Roots Music.” After learning about different fields of Public History, as well as serving as docents and assistants for “New Harmonies” school visits and programs, eleven students traveled with History Professor Dr. Kathy Newfont and Ramsey Center staff members to Raleigh.

While in Raleigh, students visited the North Carolina State University Public History program, and they received behind-the-scenes tours at both the North Carolina State Archives and the North Carolina Museum of History. The highlight of the trip for many was learning about the recovery, preservation, and presentation of North Carolina’s copy of the Bill of Rights.

Jonee Taylor, Class of 2012, shared, “To have been given the opportunity to tour through the actual archives storage spaces and to have been allowed to have an intimate introduction to the Bill of Rights made me feel like this was not just a break from school or that we were just a little college on a field trip. I realized when we were all standing there looking at the Bill of Rights that we were respected and privileged students with a unique opportunity.” In describing his experience viewing the Bill of Rights, Patrick Cash, Class of 2011, exclaimed, “This was the highlight of my undergraduate experience!”
