For the 2010 to 2011 academic year, the Liston B. Ramsey Center for Regional Studies at Mars Hill College will turn its focus for preservation and programming activities to the Bascom Lamar Lunsford Collection in the Southern Appalachian Archives. Lunsford was a major collector and promoter of Appalachian song and dance for much of the twentieth century. His long and rich career is well documented in the collection he deposited at Mars Hill College.

Born on the Mars Hill College campus in 1882 on the site where Cornwell Hall now stands, Bascom Lunsford had long-standing family ties to the school. He maintained these ties throughout his life, including allowing the festival begun in Mars Hill by pharmacist Ed Howard to carry his name. The Bascom Lamar Lunsford “Minstrel of Appalachia” Festival, currently in its 43rd year, will take place this year on October 2nd on the Mars Hill College campus.

The Bascom Lamar Lunsford Collection is known internationally to researchers who have visited the archives to learn about this man who not only collected over two thousand handwritten copies of folk songs and ballads, but who also began the folk festival as we know it today. The star of the Lunsford Collection in the Southern Appalachian Archives at Mars Hill College is a 31 x 26” scrapbook with some 400 pages that follows the course of his life and career, beginning with his early school and family documents and continuing on to reflect the many musicians and dancers Mr. Lunsford knew and the folk festivals he founded. The scrapbook contains letters and clippings from his performances before Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt, as well as King George VI and Queen Elizabeth of England, all with his annotations written in his own hand.

National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge Grant Update

Mars Hill College is beginning the last year of its National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) Challenge Grant to create a endowment that will fund the Southern Appalachian Archives, part of the Liston B. Ramsey Center for Regional Studies. In recognition of the strength of these archival collections and their importance for studying and preserving the history and culture of this region, the NEH granted the college the maximum allowable match for one of its prestigious Challenge Grants. Before July 31, 2011, Mars Hill College must raise $1.5 million in order to draw down $500,000 in matching funds from the NEH. As of September 1, 2010, we are pleased to announce we have raised $903,109, but we have $596,891 left to go!

We want to thank all our donors (please see below) for their generosity in helping us come this far. We would particularly like to recognize members of the Class of 1960, who gave their 50th anniversary gift to the Challenge Grant by creating the Hart-Melvin Archival Research Fellowship (please see page 6). We were touched when the Class of 2010 also designated a portion of its class gift to the NEH Challenge Grant, showing that Mars Hill College graduates fifty years apart value our archives. Finally, we want to thank the Vetust Study Club, whose members have chosen the Mars Hill College NEH Challenge Grant as a beneficiary for the 2011 and 2012 Asheville Antiques Fairs.

Mars Hill College and the Ramsey Center for Regional Studies gratefully recognize the generosity of the following donors who have made matching gifts or pledges toward our NEH Challenge Grant:

The countdown to hosting New Harmonies: Celebrating American Roots Music has begun! New Harmonies will be in Weizenblatt Gallery, located in Moore Auditorium, from September 25 – November 6, 2010. The Roots Music of Madison County, an exhibition developed by Leslie Burrell Smith, and SodomSong, a collection of Rob Amberg’s photographs of Sodom Laurel in the 1970s, will complement New Harmonies: Celebrating American Roots Music.

The music traditions presented in New Harmonies vary widely, reflecting the diversity and complexity of the American people’s heritage. The traditions highlighted range from sacred to secular, from indigenous to imported. Visitors to New Harmonies will hear Native American, blues, jazz, country, bluegrass, zydeco, tejano, and polka music.

Ramsey Center Concludes Year of Focus on Farmers Federation Collection

"Unveiling Our Treasures" Event Celebrates Faculty-Student Collaboration

The Spring semester of 2010 brought a continuation of the Ramsey Center’s exploration of the James G.K. McClure Collection of Farmers Federation photographs, manuscripts, and publications through research and programs. The Farmers Federation was an organization that served western North Carolina from 1920 to 1960. The McClure Collection documents the work of the Federation and provides a valuable window onto rural life during that period.

On February 23rd, Archival Research Fellows Dr. John Gripentrog, Assistant Professor of History, and Amanda McMahan, 2009 History graduate, presented the results of a fall semester spent exploring the photographs and publications in the McClure Collection for use in the “U.S. History Since 1865” course.

Local historian Pauline Cheek also spoke about her research on the Federation’s Lord’s Acre Program, in which members supported their churches by growing crops or raising animals. Filmmaker Ken Abbott shared footage he shot at the Ramsey Center’s “Back to the Beginnings” celebration at Hickory Nut Gap Farm in September 2009. Besides footage of Mars Hill College students, faculty, and staff dancing, the high point of the clip was Mrs. Hazel Rhymer singing a ballad, just as she had decades ago at Farmers Federation gatherings. Archivist Karen Paar provided an overview of the contents of the McClure Collection and its preservation needs. She outlined work for the collection going forward to care for and provide broader access to this rich resource.

At a reception following the presentations, the Class of 1960 announced its gift to Mars Hill College in honor of the 50th anniversary of their graduation. For this gift, the Class of 1960 named the Faculty-Student Archival Research Fellowship, created as part of the National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge Grant after its class sponsors, Dr. Virginia Hart and Dr. Bob Melvin. The Ramsey Center thanks Dr. Hart and Dr. Melvin for allowing this fellowship to bear their names. We also thank the Class of 1960 for so generously supporting our efforts to meet the NEH Challenge Grant by funding this important faculty-student research component of our programming.

Stories and Snapshots from the Field: Conversations with Dr. Charles Thompson

In a day-long visit to the Mars Hill College campus, Dr. Charles Thompson—scholar, filmmaker, and Director of the Undergraduate Program at the Center for Documentary Studies at Duke University—spoke about the more than 3,000 black and white photographs in the James G.K. McClure Collection as a documentary project in its own right. Charlie Thompson brought particular insight to this topic, not only because of his work to document the lives and work of farmers and farm workers, but also because of his own experience as a farmer. Thompson began the day with a talk that placed the McClure Collection in the context of other efforts to document the lives of people who work the land. During the noon hour, he addressed the process and ethics of documentary work more specifically. Charlie Thompson discussed the importance of spending time with a community and asking what stories people from that community want to have told to the wider world. He stressed that the role of the filmmaker is to amplify their voices.

Dr. Norman Wirzba of the Duke Divinity School joined Thompson at the evening presentation for a conversation on “Farming, Food, and Faith.” This conversation ranged from the importance of local knowledge and of homecoming—particularly with regard to agriculture—to the global implications of these issues. Clips from Thompson’s film, The Guestworker, illustrated the local to global connections.
Day of Service Honors
Lord’s Acre Initiative

On Saturday, April 17, 2010, a group of Mars Hill College students, staff, and faculty served at Fields of Hope, a local organization that grows fresh produce for our western North Carolina neighbors with food insecurity. This day, a collaboration between LifeWorks and the Ramsey Center, allowed participants not only to serve, but also to gain an important historical and cultural context for this work.

The group cleared brush, picked up rocks from the field, and cut up potatoes and planted them. Students, faculty, staff, and even Mars Hill College President Dan Lunsford worked side-by-side and experienced Madison County’s thriving farm culture. After this service, the team caught a glimpse of the region’s rich agricultural history by listening to Pauline Cheek talk about the Farmers Federation Lord’s Acre program and looking at photographs from that program that are part of the James G.K. McClure Collection. Susie and A.C. Honeycutt, who run Fields of Hope, helped students place their morning’s work on the farm in its broader social justice context.

Our work with the Farmers Federation continues… The Ramsey Center is still seeking information and stories from those who remember the Farmers Federation or participated in its programs. Please contact Karen Paar, (828) 689-1262 or kpaar@mhc.edu. This photograph from the James G.K. McClure Collection was recently identified by Bessie (Van Hook) Bowers. Bessie was on the cover of the Farmers Federation News for April 1945.

The Lunsford Collection at Mars Hill College also contains the handwritten folk songs and ballads that Lunsford gathered as he traveled around the Southern Appalachian region. These texts are a valuable source of information on the variations that exist for many of these songs. Bascom Lamar Lunsford preserved these songs, and he also filled his folk festivals with musicians and dancers he met in his travels. Besides the scrapbook and songs, the Lunsford Collection includes photographs, manuscripts, and several of Mr. Lunsford’s instruments. It is housed in the Ramsey Center for Regional Studies and the Southern Appalachian Archives. To further explore the collection, please contact Karen Paar at kpaar@mhc.edu, (828) 689-1262, or Peggy Harmon at pharmon@mhc.edu, (828) 689-1394.
