Be Authentic Never Jeopardize Individuality (B.A.N.J.I.)

The M. Hill Steppers is an organization that is continually trying to bring about change and diversity to our campus. We use rhythms, hand claps, chants and stomps to create intricate beats and we all work collectively to create a show that is both entertaining and fun. The theme B.A.N.J.I., was inspired by rapper Sharaya J, and stands for “Be Authentic Never Jeopardize Individuality.” In our show we will show how one person can make a huge difference in a world divided by showing them that you can be individually unique without jeopardizing relationships and using their differences to work together.

“The Struggle is Real”: A Close Look at Innovations and Ideas Created by African Americans

Imagine living in a society where you are considered a second-class citizen; in fact there are times when you don’t feel like a citizen at all. Sometimes you wish you could be invisible, but the only thing people can see is what you look like and they hate what they see. You are judged solely on your appearances and not for who you are. Despite all of this, you are able to achieve what society says you cannot. The idea that innovation can spring up from such horrendous circumstances is a conundrum to the human mind. How is it possible that oppression and devastation can produce great ideas and innovation? African Americans, during the Reconstruction and civil right era, were more innovative and creative because of the handicaps that society forced upon them. The individuals examined prove to be a perfect example of “disabilities” producing the ability to attain greatness.

A Canine Conundrum: The Treatment of Dogs in World War II and the Vietnam War

Dogs first took a significant role in American combat during World War II. As the war closed, the military made a successful effort to return the dogs to the United States, a decision that the public joyously endorsed. In the Vietnam War, the animals were once again utilized. However, only a small fraction of the canines were brought back after the war. The rest died during war, were left behind, or were euthanized. Why was there a disconnect in the treatment of the dogs following the wars? With the success of a war that the public saw as the embodiment of the American Spirit, dogs were celebrated upon their return, but, in the Vietnam War, dogs were forgotten to the jungles of Southeast Asia by a nation that was questioning its military involvement.

Synthesis of 4-Hydroxquinazolinone Silver Acetate and its Derivatives

Carbenes are organic compounds that have been synthesized in order to fight an ever-changing world of bacteria. They have shown much promise in the last several decades at being effective at fighting bacteria. Along with carbenes, the element silver has also been on the rise. Although it has been used since medieval times, it has just recently gained notice in the spotlight as having antibacterial properties. It is believed that by incorporating silver into carbenes, namely imidazole and quinazolinone, could increase the potency of them against bacteria. If stable compounds containing both a carbene base and silver are developed, a doorway to new forms of medicine could be opened. My goal is to attach a silver cation to the carbene carbon located on the imidazolium ring of quinazolinone and to attach different substituents to the nitrogen atoms surrounding the carbon. The antibacterial efficacy will be tested to determine if these dual action compounds are more potent to bacteria than silver and quinazolinone compounds are individually.

Pain Management Facilitated by Art Therapy and the cold Pressor Test

This presentation provides a review of distraction for pain management literature and will report the results of a research study. The study's purpose is to investigate the effects of art therapy distraction on pain intensity and tolerance. The study will compare a distraction condition to a venting condition and a control in a repeated-measures design. Pain will be induced using the cold pressor test. The first hypothesis states that participants will report lower pain intensity and tolerate the pain longer in the distraction condition compared to the venting condition and the control. The second hypothesis states that participants will report lower pain intensity and tolerate pain longer in the venting condition compared to the control. Results of the study will add to the body of art therapy literature as well as potentially provide support for an effective pain intervention.

IFYC: Who We Aspire to Be

What do Christians, Muslims, Non-religious, Atheists, Agnostics, Pagans, Buddhists, Jews, Agnostics, Hindus, Taoists, Sikhs, and Jains all share in common? Interfaith research shows that no matter what people believe, all share a commitment to common values for the common good. This presentation, led by a team of students who attended the 2014 Interfaith Youth Core (IFYC) leadership-training institute, will share what they are learning about crossing value/belief lines to work together for the common good. Interfaith dialogue has been an area of research in religious studies for millennia, but until the last century, its aim was often to convince other to change their beliefs. IFYC, begun by Eboo Patel, Ph.D., in 2000, has a different goal: to encourage different beliefs, while working together for justice on commonly agreed goals. Come learn about this new movement, now at MHU.

The Ethics Bowl
The MHU ethics bowl team will be applying ethical frameworks to real life medical ethics cases in order to demonstrate the place of ethical discourse in practical situations. This ethics bowl simulation will not only demonstrate applications for the reasoning skills practiced in FYS 112 displaying their relevance outside the classroom, but it will also illustrate the role of effective collaboration in forming a persuasive presentation of an argument.
The format for this presentation will be a simulated debate on a case in medical ethics. There will be two teams presenting arguments in response to a prompt question and a judge or panel of judges will provide feedback on which arguments were the strongest based on the use of ethical frameworks, quality of the presentation, and evidence of effective collaboration.

Redefining Poverty: Discovering What Poverty Really Means Along Our Journey to Haiti
As an alternative spring break trip, this group traveled to Terrier Rouge, Haiti to serve with an organization called Bethlehem Ministry. This organization empowers the people of Haiti by supporting sustainable change through educational, economical, environmental, and medical initiatives. Our presentation will demonstrate how our definition of poverty changed as we traveled out of America, through the Dominican Republic, into Haiti. By telling the story of Haiti and the people we encountered while we were there, we hope to build awareness of poverty, inspire others, and show our passion for the empowerment of Haiti.

Cadenza 2014: Breakthrough of Vision
With the launch of the University, the “New U” has been a central theme for this school year. With a new beginning for everything MHU, students have been encouraged to break boundaries and push the limits in their achievements. This new beginning has served as inspiration for the 2014 Cadenza. This year we are focusing on the Breakthrough of Vision and celebrating the student body’s limitless creativity. Join us to hear some of the students’ commentary on their submissions of art, poetry, and prose.

Transcending the Mundane: An Analysis of Classical Mysticism as Perceived by Modern Scholars Through the Lens of Endurance Running
This presentation examines the experiences of world class endurance runners with the experiences of mystics to determine their relation. The same analytical tools that William James, Walter Stace, and Ralph Hood Jr. use to understand religious and nonreligious mystical experiences is used to answer questions related to the claims of athletes, specifically endurance runners. Religions reveal humanity’s focus on the search for, as Evelyn Underhill would say, “that more real world of essential life”. This presentation will look at the questions of: what is a mystical experience? how do athletic experiences compare with the experiences within religious tradition? and what research and scholarly analysis has been done to explain mystical experience and how does this apply to athletes?

The Radium Girls: The Deadly Glow of Disaster

The women employed by U.S. Radium Corporation during the early twentieth century went to work each day while unknowingly exposing themselves to toxic radium. While the employees had many duties, one was the painting of military issued watches with glow-in-the-dark paint; the main ingredient was radium. Over the years of exposure, many women developed symptoms such as necrosis of the jaw, cancer, blindness and ultimately death. Five women formerly employed by the corporation who developed these symptoms sued U.S. Radium. The media sensationalized the lawsuit and took aim at the corporation for the mistreatment of the factory workers and knowingly exposing them to toxic radium. With the help of the media, including publication of several articles in the New York Times, the Radium Girls won their lawsuit only shortly before their deaths. Their suffering led to a reevaluation of worker safety standards, the Occupational Disease Law and ultimately the beginning of Public Health Environmentalism.

Among Gray Shadows: The Good, the Bad, and the Beautiful of the Hard-Boiled Genre

The private eye, the racketeer, the crooked cop, and the femme fatale are archetypal characters of detective fiction - people that live in an urban criminal underworld filled with deception, seduction, and corruption. These characters and this world can be found in the literary genre known as Hard-boiled fiction. Even though this genre emerged in the ’20s and ’30s and may sound unfamiliar, the impact from its characters is still experienced today. This presentation will explore the traits of these specific character types and will look at examples from literature. Finally, it will show how these archetypal characters remain relevant in today's culture.

Stay Fit to Fight Back

The World Cancer Research fund estimates that about one-quarter to one-third of the new cancer cases expected to occur in the United States in 2013 “will be related to overweight or obesity, physical inactivity, and poor nutrition and thus could also be prevented”. We will explore the new thoughts and ideas of adding physical activity to a cancer treatment plan and how it may increase a patient’s chances of survival. In addition, we will look at programs that assist cancer survivors in getting their life back to normal such as the Livestrong program at the YMCA, and how physical activity can help patients cope with the lasting effects of treatment. Most importantly we will look at how being physically active and living a healthy lifestyle may be able to decrease the chance of being diagnosed with cancer; which is the second leading cause of death in the United States behind Heart Disease.
Kelly Jones, Melissa Stuckie

Fit or Fat – How Can You Tell, Where Do You Fall?

The question “Am I fit or am I fat?” is one that plagues American society today. We begin our discussion with the human somatotype, the difference between these visually and mathematically, using Body Mass Index (BMI) and body fat percentages as a starting point. Crazy fad diets and body trends influence the way we look at ourselves and how we work to meet the ultimate goal of fitting whatever image we perceive as attractive and fit”. We will put your knowledge to the test to see if you are good at deciphering the Fit from the Fat.

Public Perception of People with Mental Illness in Prison

People with mental illness who commit crimes often are not getting adequate mental health support while incarcerated or after reentry into society. One factor affecting support for this group is lack of public understanding. This project is designed to evaluate college student perceptions about mental illness and incarceration. Participants in this study will complete an “Implicit Associations Task,” which is designed to find underlying biases. The results of the Implicit Associations Task will be presented at SLAM along with the implications related to college student perceptions of mental illness and incarceration.

The Relationship Between University Student’s Healthy Food choices and Relaxation

Making healthy food choice can be a struggle for anyone. People who struggle with making healthy food choices have some options that may aid them. Relaxation, rest, dissonance, and education are methods that will be reviewed during this presentation. These methods provide a multitude of approaches to assist in making healthy food choice. My research sheds light on how these methods may have an impact on food choices and attitudes. This presentation looks at the overall relationship between food choice and relaxation. I will explain how different types of education and relaxation can work together to alter food choices and encourage healthier food decisions.

Raising the Flag: A Statement To and For the World

At the height of the Space Race against the Soviet Union, the United States assumed primacy by landing the first man on the Moon on 20 July, 1969. My presentation reflects on the intended meaning of the raising of the US flag on the moon and how the rest of the world interpreted it. My research indicates that although the American Congress wanted to send a clear message of national pride to the world by choosing to place the US flag on the moon, the meaning of that action resonated in diverse ways throughout the world.
Brett Pardue
Time and Tide: Chaos and Order in Benjamin Britten’s “Peter Grimes”
Peter Grimes (1945), considered one of Benjamin Britten’s greatest musical achievements, is an opera that showcases some of society's most taboo and controversial subjects. In both the music and plot, Britten portrays themes of existential isolation and condemned sexuality coupled with vicious gossip and searingly intense drama, all centered around the unraveling mental state of a deranged, violent, but victimized man. In this exploration of Britten's work, we discover a parallel between the artist and the art—between the creator and his creation—and the inevitable conclusion of tragedy.

Roxanne Paris
When Do I Have to Be Read My Miranda Rights?
Miranda v. Arizona (1966) is a landmark case that birthed the infamous Miranda Warnings. However, the general public is often unaware of when they are and are not required to have their Miranda Warnings read to them. I have done a content analysis on the cases that built up to and helped shape the Miranda ruling and will provide a brief history of each case. I will then show how those cases fit in to the Miranda decision. There are, however, exceptions to the Miranda ruling, which will be covered in my presentation as well. Finally, there will be an interactive portion of my presentation where an audience member will participate in a mock-arrest and I will ask the audience, based on the knowledge I have provided them with, when they think our "suspect" must be read their rights.

Elissa Peragine
Language as Art (Two Comedies)
How we communicate is intensely personal and ever changing in our technological world. The plays presented are a humorous look at how we communicate and how we interpret the language we choose to use. As a director, the plays present a challenge as they vary in style. They are both language comedies: the humor is painted by the dialogue. Yet, one is realistic and one is absurd. The M Word is about two overly intellectual people discussing a contract of their entire marriage. Arabian Nights is more ridiculous. Two people have a fairly normal conversation as an “Interpreter” outrageously comments on the action, in a more fantastical style. The “art” of language provides most of the comedy, and I will find the balance adding to and accentuating the comedy that exists naturally within the individual styles.

Thomas Propest
The Significance of Barn Quilts
Barn quilts are important in that they bring members of a community together and give them a chance to tell stories as individuals and as a whole. They introduce inexpensive, easy to make, yet very beautiful pieces of art work that enhance the aesthetic of an otherwise plain looking barn or building. Not only that, but they are appealing to tourists who will come to the area to see them or will stumble upon them and often spend money at businesses that have quilts, thus fueling the local economy and give them another reason to come back to the area and to invite their family and friends to do likewise.
